1. Please explain any other conditions or requirements for access to patent information besides those covered in Part 1 questions 3 (access mechanism) and 4 (who may access), such as limits on the number of queries, number of results, or data limits.

There are no limits on the number of queries or the number of results. The electronic database of European patents contains data on European patents for which the Republic of Lithuania is a designated as a validation or extension state. The electronic database of national patents contains data on published national patent applications and granted patents. The database contains all descriptions of patents issued under the Patent Law in PDF and HTML format. The database also contains all descriptions of published patent applications starting from 2011 and descriptions of previously published patent applications for which no patents have been granted. Both databases also contain information on supplementary protection certificates issued for patents. Although this database is an exact copy of the data stored in the Patent Register, the information provided has no legal effect and is provided for public information purposes. Interested persons wishing to obtain official confirmation of the legal status of the invention must file a request to obtain the receipt of an extract from the Patent Register or a certified copy of the patent application.

NO

If yes, please indicate for which information and explain the access procedure (e.g. how to create an account, what forms of payment are accepted, etc.).

5. Are documents available for download in a searchable text format?

Examples of searchable text formats include plain text documents, HTML, XML, and certain PDFs that are created with readable text. If a PDF was created from a scanned image with OCR (optical character recognition) applied, then select "PARTIAL" as text may not always be converted correctly.

This question refers only to the content of the document which can be represented as text. Do not consider images or figures in your answer. If a document has both images and text, answer "Yes" if all the text elements are searchable.

YES

If yes, please explain how updated documents are presented in search results (e.g. with updated kind codes according to WIPO ST.50).
